

New Learning Trail Unveiled Today in Columbus

By Tammy Terry Anchor

November 19 2008 | text size: small medium large

Parents and kids now have an interactive way to learn in Columbus. The United Way, Aflac and the City of Columbus all came together to promote early childhood learning. The Born Learning Trail was unveiled today at Shirley Winston Park. The new trail will give kids the chance to play games and learn. Aflac Vice President and Chief People Officer Sharon Douglas says "It teaches learning at the very early age, we are aware that if they start early they are better prepared when they go to school, when they are in school". The trail has nine signs that are designed to help parents and children interact to improve language and literacy skills.